

Fishy windsock fun

Last week we were at Nan a and Grandads caravan in the New Forest. We love it there, but staying in a caravan with three small children can be fraught at times, if you are not prepared. I have found the best thing to do is to take a few art or craft activities to do when the weather turns bad or the children get fractious.

My mum prepared a fun activity to make a fish windsock. The fish templates were downloaded here. My mum made our fish a little bigger. She cut them out ready for the children to decorate.

We all had fun sticking the eyes on our fish and then glueing the scales on to make them look good. We didn't have enough scales to decorate both sides, so we drew on the other side. Mine became a rainbow

Once decorated, we glued the edges together and made the fish as per the instructions from www.thetoymaker.com

I think they all turned out really well and looked very effective.

Now our fish were made, we went straight outside together to fly our windsocks. We held them out and watched them fly in the direction of the wind.

The wind was not too strong on this day, so we all ran up and down the road flying our fish behind us. Th

It was a fantastic activity for the children, we were creative, got plenty of exercise and fresh air with lots of fun thrown in. What more could you want?
