

Let kids be kids linky 8/4/14

Welcome to let kids be kids linky.

This is a linky all about letting kids be kids, getting back to basics and having great childhood fun. We live in such a fast paced modern world with so much technology and stresses round every corner, we often need to be reminded to just 'play' and have fun, it's healthy for us all (yes, that includes you parents!).

Please join me in spreading the word, for encouraging children to step away from the technology for a while and go out, run around, use their imaginations and just have general basic FUN!

It's the easter holidays, which means lots of fun for children! I am taking my children away this week for a few days to the New Forest, so I'm sorry, I may not get round to reading many of your posts until the end of the week, but I promise I will, so please bear with me. What plans do you have for the holidays?

Thank you to all the lovely linkers from last week. I loved the pooh sticks championships via A family day out it sounded like the best basic childhood fun day. Twice a mummy double the fun shared a lovely fun easter canvas painting activity and CharlieMoo's showed us a fantastic fun and educational day out of Bush-craft with Studland Sea School.

There's not many rules, just link up your posts, old or new, about genuine childhood fun (of any age). It may be fun outdoors, jumping in puddles, nature hunts, riding bikes or making mud pies. Or it may be fun indoors with arts and crafts, making dens, cooking, messy play or reading. Or how about visiting a farm or fun at a fete. Or a discussion about kids growing up too fast, etc.

Whatever basic fun you have been having or discussing, link up and share your ideas, visit others to get inspiration and comment to give each other encouragement and support, but most importantly, HAVE FUN!

This linky will open every Tuesday for 6 days, so there's plenty of time to add your posts.

Please spread the word and grab my badge from my sidebar if possible.

If you tweet me your link (@karenattwinlife), I will happily retweet.

If you like this blog, I'd very much love a nomination in the BiB awards, thank you.

